ORDER OF AFFIRMANCE

This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction, pursuant to a jury verdict, of possession of stolen property, changing, altering, removing, or obliterating the serial number on a firearm, and possession of a firearm by an ex-felon. Eighth Judicial District Court, Clark County; Michael Villani, Judge.

Appellant Daimon Monroe and accomplice Bryan Fergason were arrested for burglarizing Anku Crystal Palace. Officers subsequently executed search warrants on Monroe's home and storage units rented by Fergason, Monroe, and Monroe's girlfriend, Tonya Trevarthen. They also searched Fergason and Trevarthen's bank accounts and safety deposit boxes. The searches revealed large quantities of stolen property.

On appeal, Monroe argues that his pre-arrest detention was illegal and challenges the search warrants on the grounds that they were not supported by probable cause and lacked particularity.[1] We conclude that his arguments lack merit and we affirm.

[1]Monroe also argues that (1) the district court erred in refusing to provide his proffered jury instructions and (2) his sentencing under Nevada's large habitual felon statute constitutes cruel and unusual

Pre-arrest detention

Monroe contends that his initial arrest was unlawful because it occurred as the result of an unreasonable search or seizure. See U.S. Const. amend. IV; Brown v. Texas, 443 U.S. 47, 50 (1979); Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961). From this premise he reasons that, since his arrest was unlawful, the evidence seized as the result of his arrest should have been suppressed, and that the district court abused its discretion in not doing so. See Steagald v. United States, 451 U.S. 204, 215-16 (1981). We disagree.

NRS 171.123 governs investigative stops, and states, in relevant part:

> (1) Any peace officer may detain any person whom the officer encounters under circumstances which reasonably indicate that the person has committed, is committing or is about to commit a crime.
> (3) The officer may detain the person pursuant to this section only to ascertain [his] identity and the suspicious circumstances surrounding [his] presence abroad. . . .
> (4) A person must not be detained longer than is reasonably necessary to effect the purposes of this section, and in no event longer than 60 minutes.

punishment. We have considered these arguments and conclude that they lack merit.

Investigative stops are also governed as a matter of constitutional law by Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1 (1968), and its progeny. See State v. Lisenbee, 116 Nev. 1124, 1127-28, 13 P.3d 947, 949 (2000). Any stop by an officer must be "'"justified at its inception, and . . . reasonably related in scope to the circumstances which justified the interference in the first place."'" Hiibel v. Sixth Judicial Dist. Court of Nev., Humboldt Cty., 542 U.S. 177, 185 (2004) (alteration in original) (quoting United States v. Sharpe, 470 U.S. 675, 682 (1985) (quoting Terry, 392 U.S. at 20)). "The 'reasonable, articulable suspicion' necessary for a Terry stop is more than an 'inchoate and unparticularized suspicion or "hunch."' Rather, there must be some objective justification for detaining a person." Lisenbee, 116 Nev. at 1128, 13 P.3d at 949 (quoting Terry, 392 U.S. at 27).

The police initially stopped Monroe and Fergason for suspicion of burglary of a nearby dentist's office. Monroe claims that the detention became unlawful once police learned that the dentist's office showed no signs of forced entry or missing property. This argument, however, ignores the fact that the detaining officers were aware of the suspected burglary at Anku Crystal Palace and were awaiting the arrival of another investigative unit. Under these circumstances, the officers were justified in detaining Monroe and Fergason until the officers responding to Anku Crystal Palace had investigated there and reported back their findings. The suspected break-ins were similar (entry through the front door), their locations were close to one another, and the timing would have enabled Monroe and Fergason to have burglarized Anku Crystal Palace before burglarizing the dentist's office.

Accordingly, we conclude that Monroe's arrest did not result from an unreasonable search or seizure and thus reject his argument that the district court abused its discretion by not suppressing the evidence seized as the result of his arrest.

Search warrants

Monroe contends that the search warrants violated his Fourth Amendment rights because they were not based on probable cause and lacked particularity. We disagree.

The burden of proving that a search warrant is invalid is on the defendant by a preponderance of the evidence, see U.S. v. Richardson, 943 F.2d 547, 548 (5th Cir. 1991), and this court will pay great deference to a lower court's finding of probable cause. See Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 236 (1983).

All search warrants must be based on probable cause. See U.S. Const. amend. IV; Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 646 n.4 (1961); Keesee v. State, 110 Nev. 997, 1002, 879 P.2d 63, 66-67 (1994). "'Probable cause' requires . . . trustworthy facts and circumstances which would cause a person of reasonable caution to believe that it is more likely than not that the specific items to be searched for are: [subject to] seiz[ure] and will be found in the place to be searched." Keesee, 110 Nev. at 1002, 879 P.2d at 66.

Additionally, all search warrants must describe the items to be seized with particularity. See U.S. Const. amend. IV. While the descriptions must be specific enough to allow the person conducting the search to reasonably identify the things authorized to be seized, a search warrant that describes generic categories of items will not be deemed invalid if a more specific description of an item is not possible. See United States v. Spilotro, 800 F.2d 959, 963 (9th Cir. 1986).

Here, we conclude that the phone calls between Monroe and his accomplices, the ensuing investigation, and Monroe's extensive criminal history sufficiently established probable cause for the issuance of the warrants. Throughout a series of recorded jailhouse phone calls, Monroe repeatedly referenced burglary tools, alluded to future burglaries he wished to commit, and expressed concern about the police searching his house and finding the stolen property. Additionally, detectives discovered that Monroe had rented a storage unit under a fake name. Finally, Monroe had a long record of prior felony convictions, many of which were for burglaries.

We also conclude that the warrants at issue described the items to be seized with sufficient particularity. The warrants authorized the seizure of "[b]urglary tools[,]" "[i]tems of property that are used to make burglary tools[,]" "[i]tems of property . . . which contain specific identifiable descriptions and/or serial numbers" that would allow officers to confirm the items as stolen, and "[a]rticles of personal property which would tend to establish the identity of persons in control of said premises . . . ." Moreover, the search warrants provided examples of each type of item to be seized.

Accordingly, we conclude that the district court did not err in refusing to suppress the evidence gathered as a result of the searches of Monroe's property, and we thus

ORDER the judgment of the district court AFFIRMED.[2]

[2]Because we reject Monroe's argument that the searches violated his Fourth Amendment rights, we similarly reject his dependant argument that there is insufficient evidence to support his convictions if the evidence from the searches is disallowed.
