Hello,

I am the managing editor at Winnemucca Publishing. It came to my attention through a reader that you are using a photo of Kevin Pasquale that belongs to us. I never received a request for permission to use the photo, so I'm asking you to remove it from your website and videos since it is the property of Winnemucca Publishing.

In the future, if you'd like to use content that belongs to Winnemucca Publishing, please provide a written request to this email address as we have requirements to do so. Also, "Pasquale" is pronounced "Pas-QUAL-eee" just for your future reference.

Thank you,

Jen Anderson

Hi Jen:

We prefer to use the most flattering photo possible for participants, so we intended to swap this photo out eventually anyway. We will remove the photo but reserve the right to raise the "fair use exception" if it comes up in this situation or in any other in the future, and will of course take the initial step of requesting permission from you should it come up again as we expand case coverage in your district.

You and your organization has full authorization to use any of our media in any way, now and in the future.

We will blur the images within the next 24 hours and add the following statement for the viewers: "Per the request of Jen Anderson at Winnemucca Publishing, photographs of Kevin Pasquale have been blurred or removed and will be replaced at a later date with original media. On confrontation of Copyright violation we can attempt to raise the fair use exception, but have declined to do so in this specific situation."

Respectfully,
-Alex
